I've always loved
being surrounded
by plants, spending
time in wild places,
and exploring parks.
But given I like a
wandering life,
gardening has never been something I thought I'd find interesting. But as I've gotten older,
and unlearned

many of the restrictive self-imposed rules I made to cope as a kid... I've discovered
a love for sending
to plants. Granted,
it's a couple of
indoor plants and
a few outdoor
succulents, but...
I love it all the same. Having

life includes things
so much joy it's hard to explain ...
Often the simplest
things in life bring
us the most pleasure,
right? That's a
lesson I'd have to spend my entire life re-learning.
like wish yourself,

being impatient at
a plant for growing
too slowly is pointless.

Growth takes time,
persistence, care,
and understanding.

We're more alike
than you might first think.

When I'm older, I'll
have a garden.

Full of happy plants
and people.
